

Putting results into EC officers' hands

On December 1st and 2nd, we put 48 citizen based research topics in the hands of policy officers of the European Commission in Brussels to influence future research calls. We collaboratively worked on further shaping them into actual topics for the next round of European research funding in 2017/2018.

Coming up...

In January, we will deliver the final 48 co-created research topics to the European Commission. They will contribute to agenda setting for the next two years of Horizon 2020. Another aim is to influence upcoming national and international research programmes over the next years.

Online Consultation

More than 3400 people participated in our online consultation between end August and October, telling us in which direction research should go. It was based on REAL societal needs identified during the previous CIMULACT consultations.

What we do

CIMULACT establishes a genuine dialogue, where desirable and sustainable futures can be developed, debated and transformed into recommendations for research and innovation policies.

Enriching research topics

The second face-2-face consultation phase has finished. More than 900 citizens, stakeholders and experts enriched the CIMULACT research topics in workshops in 30 countries.
